Innovation: Core Competency for the 21st Century

by Robert B. Tucker

Despite the growing recognition that innovation is the only sustainable source of growth, competitive advantage, and new wealth, an Arthur D. Little survey of 669 global company executives found fewer than 25 percent of the companies believe innovation performance is where it needs to be if they are to be successful in the competitive marketplace. Having tried an endless array of alternatives, company leaders are now accepting enterprisewide innovation as a key operational discipline, just as in the past they adopted the disciplines of quality, planning, and management.
